cultural faculty focus on written, or inscribed transmissions of memories. How Societies Remember - Paul Connerton - Google Books All beginnings contain an element of recollection. This is particularly so when a social group makes a concerted effort to begin with a wholly new start. There is a measure of complete arbitrariness in the very nature of any such attempted beginning. The beginning has nothing whatsoever to hold on to; it is as if it came out of nowhere. Social memory (Chapter 1) -
How Societies Remember

Psychoanalysts have studied personal memory in the course of investigating the lifehistories of individuals, whereas psychologists have studied cognitive memory in the course of investigating the workings of universal mental faculties. Habit-memory, by contrast, appears to be an unoccupied or even non-existent space. In his book How Societies Remember (1989) Connerton builds upon the basic assumption of scholars like Halbwachs, Hobsbw/Ranger, Nora and Lowenthal “that there is some such thing as a collective or social memory ““, but he takes a different position "to where this phenomenon, [...] can be found to be most crucially operative”.
